Parks and Rec Team Awarded for Customer Service

Hats off to the city’s Parks and Recreation staff, which recently received the Coeur d’Alene Chamber of Commerce’s Service Excellence Award. The monthly honor recognizes businesses and organizations that go above and beyond expectations to provide fantastic customer service, said Marilee Wallace, Membership Development Director for the Chamber. Parks and Recreation Director Steve Anthony praised his team for the award. “These are our frontline people that deal with thousands of customers and to be recognized with this award is an honor,” Anthony said.

ADA Accessible Ramp Dedicated at Independence Point

Thanks to generous donations from the Panhandle Kiwanis, Sunrise Rotary and Avista Utilities, a wheelchair-accessible ramp leading to the water at Independence Point has been installed. Project cost is $14,000 and made possible by these organizations. “This will allow people that couldn’t get into the water to enjoy the lake,” said Virgil Edwards of the Disability Action Center. “It provides another level of independence.” Two ramps provide access to the lake, according to Parks and Recreation Director Steve Anthony. One runs into the water and the other along the shoreline.

Katie Kosanke:
Growing a Healthier Urban Forest

Nurturing a healthy urban forest is no small task and at the helm of it is Urban Forestry Coordinator Katie Kosanke. Municipal Milestones recently caught up with Katie to learn more about her role and the importance of city trees to a thriving community.

New Winton School Dedicated

More than 100 people, including Coeur d’Alene Mayor Steve Widmyer, Chamber of Commerce CEO Steve Wilson, Coeur d’Alene School Board Chairman Christa Hazel and School Superintendent Matt Handelman attended the recent dedication of the upgraded Winton Elementary School.

The new 52,000-square-foot building sits on the site of the former 89-year-old school at 920 W. Lacrosse, northwest of downtown Coeur d’Alene. General contractor, T. W. Clark Construction, LLC, of Spokane, completed construction earlier this month—one time and on schedule.

As the city’s urban forester, what are your primary responsibilities? There are over 21,000 street trees, 4,700 park trees and countless trees in natural open space areas that the city is responsible for. Making sure that trees are healthy and safe is the number one priority. A big part of my job is issuing permits for planting, pruning and for approved removals. I work closely with abutting property owners to resolve many challenging tree issues since they are responsible for maintaining the trees in the right-of-way. I am involved in the planning process to make sure that street trees are included in every residential and commercial project. I coordinate contract street tree planting projects each year as well as contracting other major park tree work. I’ve been involved in various ladder fuel reduction projects in natural open space properties and many seedling plantings. Much work is accomplished with help from our hard working Parks Department personnel, assistance from other city departments, and countless volunteers.

Why is a healthy, “tree-friendly” community important? Having a healthy tree-friendly community is important as healthy trees provide many environmental, social and economic benefits. Trees supply oxygen, mitigate stormwater run-off, and decrease energy use. Trees make Coeur d’Alene a beautiful city for people to live in, to visit, and create a wonderful sense of place.

Coeur d’Alene is known as a Tree City USA. What does that mean? Coeur d’Alene has been a Tree City USA for 31 years, which is quite the accomplishment. The program is (Continued on page 3)
More than 600 Attend Ales to Trails Fundraiser

Organizers of the annual Ales to Trails event, which supports the North Idaho Centennial Trail system throughout the community, said the recent event at McEuen Park was a big success. “It was apparent throughout the entire event that people were smiling, dancing, and visiting with friends—all for a great cause,” said Greta Gissel, Executive Director of the North Idaho Centennial Trail Foundation.

More than $15,000 was raised to support the local trail network, Gissel said. The money will go toward preserving, promoting and developing the North Idaho Centennial Trail network.

through the national Arbor Day Foundation and to qualify a city must have a tree committee, a tree care ordinance, must spend at least $2 per capita on tree-related tasks and have an Arbor Day observance and Proclamation. In 2014, 803 new street trees and 800 tree seedlings were planted through various projects and through development requirements. Each year the $2 per capital is well-exceeded through tree requirements, staff time, grants and volunteer hours.

Looking ahead, what would you like to see with Coeur d’Alene’s tree inventory? Having a tree inventory is important to know what trees are where, what condition they are in and what maintenance tasks are needed. It is important to be continually planting trees, but also to be making sure the ones we have are cared for. I would like to see a more advanced inventory data collection system, which we are currently working toward. In the long term, I would like to see more comprehensive care of all of the street trees.

Can we get a little personal background? Education, family, etc. I am a Certified Arborist and Certified Tree Risk Assessor through the International Society of Arboriculture. I have a degree in Environmental Science from Spokane Community College and attended the Community Tree Management Institute. In my free time, I love gardening and spending time outdoors hiking and camping with my husband and two boys.
